

I'm not robot

Continue

My talking dog app

Dogs are a man's best friend. Having one is like adding an extension to a family because they are so very cute. Caring for them can be a bit of a struggle, though. These days, there is a healthy selection of dog apps that can help you out. Here are the best dog apps for Android! Don't forget, they're all good dogs. We also have a list for the best dog games and games for animals if you want to check that out as well.

11petsDog BreedsFitBarkGoogle MapsMerck Vet ManualPetCoachPet First AidPetDeskRoverTractive GPS Dog and Cat Finder11petsPrice: Free11pets is a pet care app that helps manage your dog's health. Some features include a built-in schedule so you can keep track of things like vet visits, medication plans, vaccinations, and other events. There are also places for you to enter things like your dog's medical history, such as temperature, weight, and other information. It also has some cute stuff like dedicated, individual pet galleries where you can save pictures of your pets. It is one of the better applications for dogs. It is also for other pets as well. Dog BreedsPrice: Free /$2.99Dog Breeds is a simple reference guide style application. It has a metric ton of dog types so you can find out what kind of dog you have. It's also fun to just roam around and check out all the different breeds for fun. The application supports offline use, fairly decent search function, comment download feature, bookmarks, search history and more. The application also updates whenever new dog breeds come out. Of course, something like Google Search works well if you need to answer a quick question, but this is definitely more for hardcore dog enthusiasts out there. FitBarkPrice: Free /$9.95 per month / VariesFitBark is a fitness tracker, but for dogs. It also works as a GPS tracker. This requires a FitBark GPS, FitBark 2, or FitBark Dog Activity Monitor to function properly. The application is at least free. In any case, you can monitor the health of your dog, its walks and its general movements. Thus, you can reliably tell when your dog moves less. This may indicate a problem. In addition, trackers can monitor the frequency of your dog's itching if it has a skin problem. There are many other things you can do. Trackers range from $69.95 for a basic health monitor to $99.95 plus subscriptions for a fitness tracker. Google MapsPrice: FreeGoogle Maps is one of the excellent dog apps. Most of it is used for restaurants, traffic updates and other things. However, Maps is a great place to find dog parks, vets, dog friendly hotels, walking spots, and more. In addition, it should have decent information about things like 24/7 pet hospitals and stuff like that in case of emergency. Let's face it, you probably already have Google Maps. Why not use it for your dog too? Google SearchPrice: FreeGoogle Search is good for tons of stuff for dog owners. You can quickly find out the fun facts about Find your dog near vets, or check out training tips if you are having a hard time. Use Usage What we like most is the ability to quickly search for poisons and instructions on what to do if your dog ingests them. There used to be great apps for things like this, including APCC aspca, but most of these apps haven't seen an update in half a decade or longer. Google Search is more modern and reliable these days for such things. Merck Vet ManualPrice: FreeMerck Vet Manual is a pretty decent application for all participating pet owners. It has thousands of topics written by more than 400 vet experts. In addition, the application has photos and videos of thousands of disorders and diseases, so you can see what one may look like. It can be great for people wondering if their dog needs a trip to the vet. Of course, we do not recommend that you use this for self-driving diagnostic purposes. If you think something is seriously wrong, see the vet immediately. Still, it's a great reference material. Pet First AidPrice: FreeDogs have a way to get into some really not great situation. Dog apps like Pet First Aid can help. It has detailed instructions on how to give enough emergency care and first aid to your dog until you can get to the vet. It also has drug manuals, preventive care tools, and you can even program a vet number into an app to call them quickly if the app doesn't work. Perhaps the best part is that there are quizzes about the content so you can make sure you learn. It's a free app and you should get it. PetDeskPrice: FreePetDesk is an information application for pet owners. This includes dogs! It helps make appointments for vets to see your dog. In addition, he monitors medication and monitors communication with his veterinarian. The app includes a network of vets, groomers, and even catering. This way you can find a sitter when you go on vacation. It supports other animals as well as dogs. Many of the services included the cost of money, but the app is free to download and use. It is one of the basic applications for dogs. RoverPrice: Free / VariesRover is a dog sitting app. You'll find all kinds of sitters for both short and long term fits. It works great if you'll be away for a day's trip or a week's vacation. You can look at all available people, talk to them, and discuss things like payment. A dog sitter can send pictures, messages and other information to you when you are not at home. It's the best service we could find that does this kind of thing. You can also try Airbnb if you want to find a place that allows you to bring dogs with you. However, if you have to leave the dog behind, the Rover can be a good solution for you. Tractive GPS Dog and Cat FinderPrice: Free application, but you have to buy hardware tooTractive is actually a physical hardware product with the official application. Products clip on your dog (or cat) collar. The app then tracks your device and therefore your pet. It's not the only like this on the market. However, this one seems to have positive app reviews and it's quite popular. Loss Loss is a devastating and stressful experience that I would not wish on anyone. Hardware and software like this should make it easier to track down your pet if you escape the safe boundaries of a house or yard. The app is free, but the devices are a bit pricey. This usually applies to most products, not just Tractive.If we missed any of the best dog apps for Android, tell us about them in the comments! You can also click here to check out our latest Android apps and game lists! Once you understand the language of the dogs and what your puppy says with the bark, wagging the tail to speak, and other body language, you will know how to talk to the dog with effective puppy communication. Remember that your puppy is not a mind reader and what is normal behavior for people can be a complete foreign language and offensive to dogs. Instead, you can use dog talk to get your message across. People are primates that touch and hug, gesture with their hands, and have a loud and higher-penetrating tone of voice when agitated. All these things can be confusing or even threatening puppies in particular, but also for adult dogs. Avoid these mistakes when talking to your puppy: leaning over the puppy: People are taller than the chicks, and it's natural to lean over to talk or pet them. But looming over the top of the dog is intimidating, because in dog speech, that is, I am the boss, I am in control. This can be disturbing or even scary for cubs that already accept your status as boss. They can use gestures to calm down, such as submissive wetting to show they are not a threat. Strange dogs that don't know that you can become aggressive or defensive when you lean on them. Simply defend what they think of as a challenge. Instead of leaning over the top of the puppy, give the dog room to access you. Turn side-by-side and crouch or kneel on the floor so your height and attitude don't seem to be a challenge. Staring with hard eye contact: Direct eye contact can also be intimidating. Use the puppy's own soothing signals to say that you mean nothing wrong. Turn your head away, avert your eyes, and move slowly to give the puppy time to build up the courage to build up his ground or even approach. Pats on the head: Imagine you are puppy-size and hand half the size of a whole body swoops down towards the top of your head. Wouldn't you avoid yelp and yelp, and run for cover, too? Instead, think about how puppies and dogs encounter each other-smell communication with a sense of smell first, contact later. So offer a hand, palm down, for the dog to sniff the back of the fingers without the risk of being grabbed. Then offer a scratch on the front of the chest or side of the neck. Avoid patting the top of your head until you know the pet very well and it's shown a good understanding of human speech. Hugging: For puppies and dogs, hugs are not a sign of affection. Our pets use clapping to catch and wrestle during games or fights, during mating behavior, or simply to show dominance. Surrender and teach their children alternative ways to affection for dogs. Otherwise, the puppy can whip in retaliation for what he perceives as an attack. Kissing: Yes, the new puppy seems to lick-lick-lick you all the time, kind of like kissing a maniac. You may think of kissing as purely an expression of love and affection. But even among people, a kiss can also mean respect rather than admiration. Dogs and puppies show their love in other ways. Licking is instead used to show respect, respect and declaration that I am not a threat. Subordinate dogs lick the more dominant dog-or person-face or side of the mouth as a calm gesture. If you or your child tries to mimic this dog signal and kiss the dog on or near the mouth or eyes, in the dog's tongue it tells him that you are submissive to him. That could get you both in trouble. The vast majority of dog bites target a baby's face because the child hugged or tried to kiss the dog. Hugging and kissing shows the submission of the puppy. Kimberlie Dozois Photography/Getty Images Now that you understand what your own body language means, use it to talk dog to puppy. When you want your young offender cub to straighten and mind, or you want to encourage a shy puppy to be more confident, you just need to communicate with him as a canine. And no, you don't have to wagging your tail. These signals will show your dog that you should be respected: Use a calm, low-pitched tone of voice and short cropped words. High-pitched upset voices can sound whining and send the wrong signals that you're not in charge. Use the same words for the same thing every time, so your puppy will learn your language with repetition. He won't know that waiting and staying here and right away I'm back or not move means the same thing to you. Choose one. Puppies thrive routinely. Clicker training technique works especially well to communicate what these words mean. Stand tall. The dogs in charge don't have to make a production out of it, they just wear themselves as a boss. Everyone trusts them not to prove it. Dogs don't use their hands to control the movements of others – they use body blocks, shove and lean, and control space. Think about how a shepherd canine herds livestock and prompts the sheep to move without ever touching them. You can do the same, using your body to control puppy movements. Learn these ways of communicating the puppy may not be scared or upset: For shy cubs, think about ways to relieve anxiety in the same way dogs. A higher penetrating, slow and soothing voice can tell a child that you are not a threat. Don't be angry and lean over the top of the dog. Crouch or kneel. Let the puppy approach you rather than chasing after him. If you really want to arouse puppy curiosity and show that you are not a threat, lie motionless on the ground. If you need to approach, curve at an oblique angle instead of walking or running towards the puppy directly. Lick your lips or ziwn while looking away. Try laughing at the dog. Sneeze and see if the puppy sneezes back. Or mimic an unauched breath Dog laugh sound that dogs use exclusively in the game to say that you mean nothing wrong. Kneeling towards a puppy shows that you are not a threat. portishead1/Getty Images If you suspect your pet is ill, call a veterinarian immediately. For health-related questions, always consult your veterinarian as they have examined your pet, know the pet's medical history, and can make the best recommendations for your pet. Pet.